Digital Music Mentor 2.6. I am now able to sit up and ambulate. A patch is coming soon in the next version of Digital Music Mentor 2.6.Q: Android Studio NDK - Compilation error I'm trying to write a simple c++ wrapper around the native android function motion_capture_create and motion_capture_destroy. The wrapper is compiling fine with the ndk-build command, but on using the app the call to the native method returns NULL. At this point I'm trying to debug using DEBUG=stderr android list dalvik and I'm seeing the following line in my output: dalvikvm(6788): Exception in thread "main" java.lang.NoClassDefFoundError: java.lang.StringBuffer I'm wondering if anyone can point me to a solution to this - I've been thinking about adding a native header that contains the required strings, but I'm not sure where that should live in my project, or if that's even the right route to take. Many thanks A: I fixed this issue by changing the name of the method being called to motion_capture_create from the native signature motion_capture_create to the C++ method name M1_Init, which is also declared in the API contract. The UK's banking regulator is hoping to put forward a new draft of its plans to clamp down on the banks to parliament by the end of this week, and is aiming for some firm action on the back of the record-breaking £322bn clean-up bill the 'ring-fenced' banks will pay. The boss of the Financial Conduct

Authority wants to put forward plans to force banks to act quickly to reduce levels of debt on their balance sheets, and come up with a common approach to stress-testing banks. But it's not just the FCA boss that wants to see a new law passed to ensure the regulator gets the tools it needs to clamp down on big banks. UK Finance's director of governance, Steve Peers, says he also hopes to see a new law, as well as the Treasury's austerity plans, adopted before the end of the year. The new law would give the FCA new powers to make bank bondholders pay the price for bank failures, and Mr Peers
